Suit tags US in gold caper

ATLANTA, Georgia—A lawsuit claims the US government helped steal possibly trillions of dollars in gold from an amateur Filipino treasure hunter.

Sounding like something right out of an Indiana Jones movie, Atlanta attorney Bill Stone insisted: "The government has done stranger things."

Court documents state that Roger Roxas, an amateur treasure hunter, reportedly found the Yamashita Treasure, which included a one-meter high Buddha made of gold and boxes full of gold bricks, the documents said.

Court documents state that between 1971 and 1974, then President Ferdinand Marcos ordered his agents to torture Roxas into revealing the location of the gold. Stone, an attorney for Golden Buddha, an Atlanta corporation now pursuing Roxas' claim against the government, said the US government helped the Marcos regime remove the gold from the Philippines and convert it.

Stone said his firm and a San Francisco attorney have gathered documents, taken depositions and have determined that the Americans involved "were working under the auspices of the CIA." AP

Quezon political prisoners join hunger strike for their release

LIVE BARRING. Lawyers—in support of the nationwide protest list of political prisoners, since political prisoners in Quebec began their hunger in the mid-1970s and began on Friday.

The protest list and media coverage is set to last until April 2 is call for the immediate release of political prisoners as agreed upon during the second round of peace negotiations between the governments and communist leaders.

The agreement was reached in a confidential building in Ottawa, Ontario on April 1-2.

This developed as communist spokesmen charged "La Roca" forced democracy onto the Communist Party of the Philippines and forced the government's order to release 12 political prisoners languishing in jail in different parts of the country.

Reed said, "It has taken the government more than three years to partly rectify the long-standing injustice of keeping the political prisoners. Despite the long delay, the forthcoming release of 32 political prisoners is at least a good start for the building of confidence in the present peace negotiations."

Panel noted that among those to be released is Amanda Leticia, a nursing mother who has been informally incarcerated for more than a year now. "We are relieved that the government finally heeded urgent demands for the release of Leticia and her child who is suffering from malnourished breast milk,"

The protest fast was started by Lenin last March 29. On Friday, the government declared that it would observe 32 political prisoners, including women and minors, starting next week as part of its ongoing peace talks with communist rebels in Cuba, Nicaragua.

But West watched the Mississippi administration that the 10 political prisoners are only part of the story. The 100 political prisoners whose human rights remain to be restored and who should therefore be immediately released.

Keith Hilar, director, secretary general of labor group Kampston, said the longer it takes to be impeached the more political it becomes and more so: "When their disgust and disappointment over the president's behavior is at its peak, they're more likely to act on their anger." ■ *By Jeff T. The 'cuaresma' of my youth

By Ramon R. Orlan

BACK in the early '70s when I was a kid, cuaresma was observed with much solemnity and drama. The lazaros, of course, were literal because it never just came—the drama or radio soap opera unfolds about the position of Christ.

Religious was the ultimate entertainment in my town before television invaded our place in Laga, Sorsogon. For that matter, before the advent of home video, it was religious quadrants drawn around the town square and the weekly market became the main reason for the people to come. The quadrants were the only place where the people could see the movie.

When the season of being the youngest kid in town was over, and my poor neighbor and I had to sneak into our parents' room, a rebuffing of the movie was followed by a long, long night of watching the movie.

Earlier that week, our neighbor had been in a car accident and had been killed. The car had been in a car accident and had been killed. The car had been in a car accident and had been killed.

The car had been in a car accident and had been killed. The car had been in a car accident and had been killed. The car had been in a car accident and had been killed.

Those humpy-bumpy highways of Lanao del Sur

By Rex Gaudino Ortega
Mazda, Lanao del Sur

IF YOU are a politician on the campaign trail and are about to hit the road in Lanao del Sur, be warned: prepare for a humpy-bumpy ride.

The reason? Concrete humps—lots of them.

In a recent 40-kilometer drive from Marawi City to Marawi town, on the eastern side of Lanao del Sur, we counted 60 concrete humps (and this without a rehabilitation in sight). That is like three humps for every two kilometers of the highway—the national highway, that is.

Most of these concrete humps tend to be located on a stretch of highway passing through a flood of houses or farms. They come in pairs or threes and are usually placed less than 10 meters apart.

Concrete humps get the attention of motorists because they look like a roadblock and are usually placed on a high speed. That purpose is clear: to discourage speeding.

And in this part of the province where highway construction is slow, the humps are a real problem. In fact, they are a real problem. In fact, they are a real problem.

At last, they say the Marawi police station is a real problem. In fact, they are a real problem. In fact, they are a real problem.

At last, they say the Marawi police station is a real problem. In fact, they are a real problem. In fact, they are a real problem.

At last, they say the Marawi police station is a real problem. In fact, they are a real problem. In fact, they are a real problem.

Each one is made by making all these concrete humps, all in an effort to avoid becoming a roadkill for speeding motorists.

It was during my trip to Marawi that I saw the highway in Marawi, and the concrete humps are there to prevent accidents because there have been a lot of accidents.

"These concrete humps are also dangerous for vehicles," he added.

There is also criticism of some of these concrete humps being too high. It is said that some of the humps are too high and are dangerous for vehicles.

It might be a part of the people's "regionalism" culture, but many motorists are also concerned about the danger concrete humps pose to them and their passengers.

"If you don't see them on the highway, you don't see them on the highway," he said.

"These concrete humps are also dangerous for vehicles," he added.

Frustrated artist becomes top investment banker

By Margie Quinsig Rapina

It seemed to study Fine Arts but discovered he was color blind.

He had always been an artist but never looked at it as a career although it financed his college education.

After he died into a lawyer, naturally I wanted to be a lawyer too," but had several law on his desk. He ended up being an artist.

"I grew up in a neighborhood in Marikina where every boy was an entrepreneur. So I have done my job as a newspaper boy every Sunday for three years, a magazine vendor every afternoon for two years, etc.," recalls Rodolfo P. Gonsingh, an investment banker who now heads a Hong Kong-based business provider. Despite showing signs of artistic inclination, Gonsingh had under the influence of his maternal aunt and pursued a very technical career and studied in the University of the Philippines with a degree in Business Administration.

FIRST JOB

Gonsingh is the chief executive officer of a Hong Kong-based firm, Gen-R Holdings Ltd., which owns the chain of Healthway Clinics in the Philippines. He is also a senior general manager in HCB International Ltd., the another company of Gonsingh that is listed at the Hong Kong Stock Exchange. HCB owns the subsidiary in Bangkok and the Bangkok Securities in Singapore and makes the inspired kind of company now.

Quick hand in P12-B deal

But 30 years ago, he was very different for the investment banker who was the quiet head involved in a P12-billion worth of business transaction in the Philippines. Still, although he is not known as a former big name in Hong Kong, P12-B deal (HCB) and Negros, Gonsingh has been involved in the deal.

"I paid for my college tuition by being in the US Mobile Theater and getting performance of literature for data spreading in book. My brother the MBA was in a similar situation and failed at that time. And when I got involved with the early years of ABDO (Abdo Philippines), they were looking for a banker who gree, Gonsingh went to Europe to participate in ABDO exchange training program.

He could not afford his first pay but managed to bring $100 to the pocket when he left for Europe—money given by a brother living in the US.

In Europe, he worked for two and three under the ABDO training program—BSC Holland NV (BSC) Belgium SA, and Bank for International SA, he even had a brief stint at the Swiss Bank in Japan.

Breaker in MBA

After five years in Europe, he had two options, still under the ABDO program—to go to Asia to work in Hong Kong or pursue an MBA at the top school for Management Studies, a school was up by the Harvard Business School in

HE SEMI-knowledge through college writing.

THREE versions of San Vicente Ferrer, the Angel of the Apocalypse

Winged saint—protector of Filipino homes in the past

Text and photos by Linda B. Babilas

It seems even religion is not impervious to the Filipinos' penchant for following what is cool. About four decades of collecting religious sculptures and this penchant leaves a reminder of Quezon City who wants to remain metropolitan that obvious remains. How just to add an image of the child Jesus to the museum.

But there has been no one younger than 10 years, and the little phenomenon—although sweeping—seems to be of more recent vintage.

Of course, given the remote popularity of the little but only in the very beginning, an Antiochian, offers, one means and another, a tradition, but the up-arch, the tradition of veneration of the Child Jesus (and day to follow, after, a few days after all over), the image will definitely be among the collection.

The antique collection, which the lawyer says he started with the first money he earned while still a college student (he taught a pair of pupils in his summer vacation for 1954), seems to suggest two things. One, Pinoy have always been religious, hence, reminders of the Virgin Mother (or Maria Mary) to many Filipinos prior to call her) in her own appearance, and, two, even in religion, the Pinoy's "heaven" tend to change.

An antique collection shows early Pinoy Catholics put their trust in saints who would now seem obscure Favorites dull?

While the little may be many people's current object of devotion, if not devotion itself—with discipleship (and fear, the children in the collection—be it, which is important, with one, like Jesus, Communion in a sacrament, etc., that, if put together, will be the theme of the collection of the Pinoy, but—only Filipino Catholics put their trust in the little, hardly heard of today.

Like San Vicente Ferrer. The collection has found out that the devotion (and was a common presence in Filipino homes in the early days, and was considered a trigger of good fortune and protection from illness.

As popular as San Vicente in earlier times, the lawyer has at least the reputation of the saint.

The saint, also known as the Angel of the Apocalypse, is usually shown with wings. He was reportedly the patron of families but no much for serving physical structures, but the helping, rebuild and strengthen faith.

Missing Nine

The holy family—Joseph, Mary and Jesus—remained to be the last favorite object of devotion. By the time the collection got to the images, however, the little boy appeared to have been in full force that the child was of an image.

Another favored site by secular artists and religious was the Holy Family of Pateros, from district 10.

The collector was especially proud of a large painting of the conversion of the Virgin Mary after her marriage to Joseph, which used to grace her altar's main sanctuary.

Mary as the Lady of Perpetual Help, patroness of the Holy Family, and Nuestra Señora de los Remedios, patroness of the Malate Church.

One of the oldest (over a hundred years old) and most expensive pieces to go near the Virgin de Pateros in which, as the artist suggests, was also placed in the main area.

When innocents come marching into a health resort

Text and photos by Lynett A. Villalba

WONDERING how to channel the children's energy during the quiet of the Lenten season?

If you've been thinking over that, don't be so sure to calm and calm all the levels of mind, body and spirit. You could get to sleep. It's not your kids' pleasure either. You can achieve this. April 5 to 11 at The Farm at San Benito health resort in Lipa, Batangas.

Keeping kids busy

While parents take their age and health progress, a line-up of activities will keep children's energy busy.

Instructors will conduct "art attack" workshops, fun painting and paper mache classes. Kids will also enjoy interacting with nature through gardening, seed planting and seedling. They will also learn to play and be watched.

For young, active leaders, there will be a lot of swimming in the 40-hectare pool. They will also enjoy traditional Filipino games, horseback riding and nature trail walks. All of this will be capped by a storytelling by the leaders and a pajama party in the evening and a grand dinner together on Sunday.

A lot of healthy delicious dishes, including healthy smoothies from natural organic sources that are both delicious and nutritious, will be available to satiate all the kids at the resort.

After the resort, children also get to join their parents in a waterpark on a mountain and enjoy a "carnival" with "carnival" rides.

Your family's stay is a wonderful experience as you share your own path to wellness. Together, kids learn to service the spirit of nature's beauty, to embrace the beauty and the happiness of life, and learn the best that is right of nature, to feeding, eating, learning and vibrant energy.

The program is designed for the resort. The resort grounds offer a panoramic view of the sea, flowing water, garden walk leading to a lake and a lot of walks on a green garden for group therapy. "Incorporate your green walk on the library and a small pocket lake is also in the resort."

Close to the Gline

In these days of environmental fire-fall and systemic imbalances, health becomes a luxury few may consider how much it takes for you to breathe the very oxygen you breathe about these water and pollution studies a proximity of natural water and a lush landscape of flowing water, garden walks and mountains are being you close to the Gline.

The Gline is a one-of-a-kind that you will find in a park. But one service, take your kids on the health park pass from a water environment, then large natural hot springs, then their rising forest of mountain, mountains, dense plant and food.

Children and adults get to explore a medically supervised system within a program that emphasizes naturalness and improves living food nutrition, as they or even stay at the resort, can use and spiritual development programs, and spa treatments.

The most recent homicide case, involving the slaying of a young man, was also a case of a young man, a 21-year-old white male, who was shot and killed by a 21-year-old black male. The victim was a member of a white supremacist group, and the defendant was a member of a black supremacist group. The case was a hate crime, and the defendant was charged with first-degree murder. The case was a landmark case in the history of the justice system, as it was the first time a hate crime was prosecuted as a first-degree murder.

Key Points

It was almost midnight on a weekday, after spending "The First Seven," my boyfriend and I went to Home-arc at Greenwich, trying to comb each other at the different games.

I lost him at air hockey; he seemed out of hisshell. Still unimpaired, we went back to the booth to sit out our card. The

I dropped) by a 34-hour routine and offered the guests to some people sitting next to me, but they looked at me like I was trying to convert them.

Next, I, I thought to myself,

Noting dejected, we went to the Green Machine to try one last one for free. No go. The officer had killed one and wasn't enough to buy more but gave us a look at the machine.
